DETAILED ACTION

Supplemental Reasons for Allowance

1. The following is an examiner's statement for the reasons for allowance.

The present invention is directed to a method(s) and system that processes product purchase information in an electronic funds point of sale terminal arrangement. Independent claims 1, 23, 24, and 29 teach the novel feature of accessing a first application at the first DPS by an EFTPOS terminal via a non-payment application executing on the server, selecting a product via the non-payment application offered by the fist application on the first DPS, transmitting a set of customer-specific finial account data of the first EFTPOS terminal from a payment application executing on the server to a second application executing on a financial institution DPS for processing payment for the product.

2. The following reference has been identified as the most relevant prior art to the claimed invention(s). The prior art relates to a point of sale device in an e-commerce system for order processing and inventory management.

Ranganath et al. (United States Patent Application Publication 20010037245) teaches establishing a first connection between a server and a first DPS via the internet (Ranganath et al., see at least, FIG. 1; Internet Shop Server is a 'DPS' and the Application Server is the 'server'); transmitting product information from the first DPS to the server via the internet in response to a first selection of a product at first plurality of POS terminals (Ranganath et al., see at least, 0024, and 0027; FIG. 1); transmitting the information from the sever to the first POS terminal (Ranganath et al., see at least, 0024, and 0027; FIG. 1); displaying information on the POS terminal (Ranganath et al., see at least, 0024, and 0027; FIG. 1), ability to transmit data to a third party payment terminal (Ranganath et al., see at least, 0045); transmitting from the sever to the first DPS via the internet, data that indicate purchase of the product (Ranganath et al., see at least, 0024, and 0027; FIG. 1).

Art Unit: 3627

Ranganath et el. neither anticipates nor fairly and reasonably teaches transmitting from the server to the second DPS purchase data including account information and indicating an amount of money in response to the first EFTPOS terminal, processing payment for the product at the second DPS using the purchase data; transmitting a purchase confirmation from the second DPS to the server and from the server to the first EFTPOS terminal. Because the missing features are not found in a reasonable number of references, a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made would have not or found it to be obvious been motivated <sup>A</sup> to combine the missing features with Ranganath et al.

3. The following reference has been identified as relevant prior art to the claimed invention(s). The prior art relates to a vending ~~device~~<sup>device</sup> with remote electronic shopping.

Jenkins et al. (United States Patent 6,264,104) teaches an EFTPOS device, transmitting details regarding the order (e.g. credit details; the examiner interprets "credit details" to include amount of account information and money) through a K71 interface (e.g. server) to a banking system (second DPS).
Further Jenkins et al. discloses banking system signals the interface (server), which in turn signals the EFTPOS a confirmation (e.g. open door if product is available) (Jenkins et al., see at least, col. 11, lines 17-26).

Jenkins et al. neither anticipates nor fairly and reasonably teaches accessing a first application at the first DPS by an EFTPOS terminal via a non-payment application executing on the server, selecting a product via the non-payment application offered by the fist application on the first DPS, transmitting a set of customer-specific finial account data of the first EFTPOS terminal from a payment application executing on the server to a second application executing on a financial institution DPS for processing payment for the product. Because the missing features are not found in a reasonable number of references, a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made would have not been motivated to combine the missing features with Jenkins et al.

4. A foreign reference search was performed however no pertinent foreign reference was identified.

5. A non-patent literature search was performed however no pertinent non-patent literature was identified.

6. Any comments considered necessary by the application must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, show preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submission should be clearly labeled "Comments On Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
